LUSOPHONES, new entry to gadget inventory or revolution!

A language venture emerging as predominant and postdominant

Lusophones, heard so new? It's not any new gadget brand, nor any tech innovation in this digital era. Not upgraded 3.5 AI version. This refers to Portuguese speaking communities or persons globally. The map, though a bit erroneous possibly includes maximum countries {although in map left off few more like some parts of Southern Africa, Luxembourg, Calicut (Vasco da Gama, Dom Manuel I - Zamorin/Samorim history), Daman & Diu, Maratha bargi (invaders)-Portuguese guard clashes at Geonkhali, WB of India after Trichinopoly conquest} who still exercise the language and all in their daily life, needs. Now Portuguese emerged as official language of 11 countries & territories.

Referring to the dialects of Brazilian Portuguese, it has vast implication and classifications from place to place, state to state or geographical directions. And it is diversified accordingly; to exemplify, Brasiliense, Carioca, Caipira, Gaúcho, Bahian, Mineiro, Nordestino, Nortista, Paulistano, Recifense, etc. Similarly Beirão, Alentejano , Estremenho in Portugal or Angolano, Mozambicano, Bissau-Guineano, Creole, etc. in PALOP. So diversified & indigenous in their culture, language, custom & creed but all are united to nationalism. Even they're identified from the ancestral names and places they belong to. Brazilian dialects syntactically resemble Portaliano while European/PALOP dialects are matxi Portuñol.

Interestingly, Philippines is only Asian country where still Spanish is practised in form of Chavacano (also called Zamboangueño as result of Spanish colonization), a creole language spoken mainly in the southern province of Zamboanga and province of Cavite. I've met some Filipinos who utter the language easy-going, though there are noticeably some significant nuances, particularities in choice of lexicon, pronunciation, intonation, syntax, grammar. The language predominantly made place, so venture to outstand. History starts but not ends up!
